

Harlem Buyers Get a Free Car With That New Parking Spot

In more ways than one, Windows on 123 reminds us of the heady Harlem days of yore—2007, or perhaps, dare we say it, 2006. (Yup, we said it. Deal with it.) Last week the luxury condo development, made up of a 26-unit building at 117 West 123rd Street (at Lenox Avenue) and a smaller sibling a few doors down, held a lavish rooftop opening party with live jazz and booze a-flowin'. Such events are few and far between with brokerages shuttering Harlem offices as the local market founders, but the party was just the beginning. Windows on 123, the Times' Josh Barbanel reported over the weekend, has also revived a long-lost throwback to bubblier days: the attention-grabbing giveaway. Purchase one of the building's smaller parking spaces—just the right size for a Smart Car—and the developers will throw in the Smart Car for free. The spots cost $65,000, while Smart Cars sell for $15,000.
